PA NEWS

• Tuesday was a day of procedural hurdles for the Pennsylvania House. The state budget has one more hurdle to clear before it can be signed. Tuesday's session in the House was a confusing one....Representatives passed a resolution letting them change the rules around the Senate-approved budget that had been turned into a stopgap. Then they used that rule change to adopt the Senate's full budget....a motion was made to reconsider that vote...but it failed...and the budget was sent to third and final consideration. House members are expected to vote later today. There's still no agreement on how to pay for the spending plan's increases.

• Have you ever thought about a career as a state trooper? The deadline is fast approaching for those who might be interested in testing for the position in February. The deadline to apply is December 31st for anyone who might be interested in testing to become a state police cadet. More information and applications for the written exam can be found and submitted online at www.patrooper.com

• A Pennsylvania Supreme Court Justice has been suspended with pay, while an ethics panel assesses potential damage. Justice J. Michael Eakin is accused of sending and receiving emails that mocked blacks, Asians, and battered women. If the court rules against him, Eakin faces a range of possible punishment, including permanent removal from the bench.

• There was no honeymoon for newly-elected Governor Tom Wolf. Radio PA has named it the 7th story of the year, including the high-profile rejection of a major Wolf nominee.
